A PLATFORM ?

The image is a screenshot of the electrode.io website. At the top, there is a navigation bar with a search bar and several dropdown menus: 'Actu', 'Ricardo', 'Development', 'Edx', 'React', 'Node.js', 'Browsers', 'JavaScript', 'Analytics', 'LinkedIn', 'Management', 'GitBook', and 'Restos Paris'. Below this is a dark blue header with the '@WalmartLabs' logo on the left and 'HOME', 'DOCS', and 'CONTRIBUTE' links in the center. On the right of the header are three social media icons: GitHub, Twitter, and a circular icon. The main content area has a dark blue background with a starry pattern. The word 'electrode' is written in a large, white, sans-serif font, with the 'o' replaced by a stylized robot head with a heartbeat line. Below this, the text 'UNIVERSAL REACT/NODE APPLICATION PLATFORM' is centered. A paragraph of text follows: 'Electrode is a platform for building universal React/Node.js applications with standardized structure, best practices, and modern technologies baked in. Electrode focuses on performance, component reusability, and simple deployment to multiple cloud providers—so you can focus on what makes your app unique.' Below this text are two buttons: 'ABOUT ELECTRODE' (white text on a dark blue background) and 'GET STARTED' (white text on a pink background). At the bottom of the page is a decorative illustration of a futuristic landscape with blue waves, a globe, solar panels, a rover, and a pyramid, all with hexagonal icons above them.
